

this. Everybody should have equal rights and shouldn't be limited to what they can and cannot do.

Favorite Scene

One of my favorite scenes from the movie was when the bomb landed on the hood of the car that Jamie Foxx was in, while they were trying to kill each other. It was scary at first because you didn't know if or when it was going to go off and kill him. Then he just grabbed it and threw it, and as soon as it landed it took out half of a building and the guys that threw it to begin with. It was awesome how it backfired on them. You get the impression of Jamie Foxx saying, "don't mess with me or your going to get hurt" and that is exactly what happened! This scene definitely had me on the edge of my seat!

was
a cool
scene.

Favorable Impression

The scene that gave me a favorable impression of the Middle East was when Jamie Foxx and the officer he was with were in the car and they were talking. The officer says he wants the place where he lives to be safe because he has children. He said he became a cop to protect people. This shows that there are descent people in the Middle East that just want to live their life peacefully also. I was really happy this officer helped the agents as much as he did, but it was very sad when he lost his life.

paragraph

Unfavorable Impression

The scene that gave me an unfavorable impression of the Middle East is when the Saudi's had the nerve to kill a bunch of American people while they were minding their own business, playing a game of baseball. It's so unfair to take all those innocent lives. I'd be scared for my life if I had to go there. You would never know if someone would plant a bomb around you. This scene really made me feel hate toward the Middle East.
